

Sprint 1 Reflection

As an individual, I took initiative in communicating with other team members effectively and ensuring my activeness throughout the assignment. I contributed in creating and finalizing the presentation slides and presenting. I also gave input or suggestions when needed. For example, when deciding what features to add onto our project, I offered valuable feedback and recommended many additions to improve our pitch. I also made sure the presentation followed the guidelines and requirements. For instance, while creating the slides, I reminded my group to keep the slides short and concise and to not exceed the 5 slide limit enforced by the professor. All in all, while I did contribute a lot I could've done more by helping out with the script and dedicating more time to the project.'

Personally, the first challenge I encountered was finding my group when we planned on our first meeting. I arrived at the agreed spot ahead of our scheduled time, but I had difficulty navigating through the building as I was new to discovery park and hadn't explored it yet. Although this might not seem like a big deal to others, it wasted ten minutes of valuable time we, as a group, could've used to better our pitch. This helped me realize I need to prepare better and familiarize myself with a location beforehand. Although this was a huge miss, I made up for it by working a little on the project on my own.

I learned communication is really important when working with a group. If I feel like I am not putting in enough work, I need to let my group know so that we can resolve the issue. If anything goes wrong, as a group, it is important to work together and ensure we make it right. Its essential that everyone feels included and not left out.

We could've definitely met up more, but since we had only a few days before the due date, we only met three times. We could've also expanded on the feasibility portion of our pitch a little more. I did feel like it was lacking, but I didn't communicate it with the group. While there are a lot of improvements to be done, we did a great job with including everyone in the presentation and ensuring the slides meet expectations.
